A Foolish Fight.

any kind of a fight is bad enough out it always seems worse when it is etween relatives. That was the way t was when Hooty the Owl and his ousin Whitey from the far north first net. Both saw Happy Jack Squirrel and both tried to catch him at the same The result was that each got in ne way of the other, and neither aught Happy Jack. Right away they egan to quarrel, and such a foolish uarrel as it was! Happy Jack just ad to laugh in spite of the terrible right he had had.

"He's mine," bissed Hooty, and the ound of that hiss was enough to make old shivers run all over one.
"He isn't!" snapped Whitey.

He is?

"No such thing! He's mine!"
It seemed to Happy Jack that never all his life had he heard such a fool-h quarrel. Neither of them had hight him, yet they were quarreling for him, and presently they began to ght. Yes, sir, that is just what they d. They began to fight for Happy tek, yet neither had caught him, and a had no intention that ether should here was a great hissing and a great apping of bills, and then the feathers began to ity. My, how they did fly white feathers from Whitey's coat all brown feathers from Hooty's ant!

Duncan: secretary, Thomas J. Stapleton; treasurer, Samuel H. Hartman; stuff their great cruel looking claws of and Whitey tore at each other, the their great wings they beat and middle cach other. With their hookbills they struck at each other, and the time they kept up a great hissand snapping of bills, and called a other all the mean things they led think of. It was a terrible fight to know, for he saw it. And yet re was no great harm done. You they were so nearly of a size and nearly equal in strength and each such a thick coat of feathers that neither dould make the other give So they struggled and struggled it they were quite out of breath and had to stop for a rest. It a minute or two they sat and ed at each other, and a sorry look.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. Wheatley entertained at a euchre party Saturday evening last at their home on East Capitol street, the occasion being Mr. Wheatley's birthday. The ladies' first prize was won by Mrs. A. B. Swavely, and the second by Mrs. Mary T. Wheatley of Alexandria, Va. Mr. Milton R. Evans. Won the gentleman's first prize and Mr. C. B. Keefe the second. The booby prize was won by Mrs. M. R. Evans. After the cards were finished the company adjourned to the dining room, where a bountiful supper was served. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Sharah, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Swavely, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Steiner of Congress Heights, Mrs. Mary T. Wheatley of Alexandria, Va.; Miss Ella Cross, Miss Anna Cross, Miss Anna Spreckelmeyer, Mr. and Mrs. Milton R. Evans, Mr. W. R. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Keefe and Mr. and Mrs. William S. Wheatley. Mr. and Mrs. William S. Wheatley ening sight they were. The feathers of both stood right up with anger. Whitey's coat was badly mussed and torn. Hooty had lost a couple of feathers from one wing, one of his very best tail feathers had been pulled out and one eye was half closed from a blow. But he was just as fierce as ever, and perhaps a little more so. "Do you give him up now?" he hissed. "No." Whitey fairly bristled with anger. "He's mine and it will take somebody bigger than you to take, him away from me."

"Ha, ha, ha! Ho, ho, ho."

"Hooty and Whitey turned their heads and glared over at Happy Jack squirrel, who had found safety in a hollow tree, and now was looking down at them from a hole too small for them to get at him through.

"Ha, ha, ha! laughed Happy Jack again. "Excuse me, but which of you really thinks he has, me."

Hooty looked at Whitey and Whitey looked at Hootey, and both looked very, very foolish. Right then and there it came to them that they had been lighting for something that neither of them had got, and which at present little of them could get, and so, of sight. Without another word Hooty hurned and flew one way and Whitey and from that time until Whitey redained and flew just the opposite way. And from that time until Whitey redained to his home in the far north aeither ever spoke to the other. And that was foolish, too. Don't you think so.
